

Driver's Licence, Driver's Social Contract

Our current driving laws and regulations are based on our province's experience with defining our rights and responsibilities as individuals and as people who live with other people to form a society. In other words, when we get our driver's licence, we "sign" a range of agreements related to our being a driver of a motor vehicle on roads that belong to all British Columbians.

Scan the various sections of the Learn to Drive Smart handbook and identify at least 1 formal requirement and 1 informal social agreement from each section.
